

Teri's desperate days of Botox are over- or are they not? See below

1st March 2006

The secret of her desperately youthful complexion is a secret no more.

Teri Hatcher has confessed to being a Botox fan. And a collagen convert.

The 41-year-old actress, who revived her career playing Susan Mayer in Desperate Housewives, admitted she has had a little help in keeping her face linefree.

"In the past I've had Botox and collagen," she admitted in an interview in America. Botox injections are said to smooth out wrinkles by paralysing facial muscles while collagen plumps up parts that are losing their lustre, especially lips.

Few stars, however, admit to having such procedures, airily proclaiming that their remarkably preserved looks are the results of rigorous exercise, diet or good genes.

Miss Hatcher, however, decided to come clean - because she has apparently decided not to have such treatments again. She said she would let herself age naturally - and gracefully - instead.

"I haven't had anything done to my face in over a year," she said.

"And I don't plan to. It needs to be OK to have wrinkles."

Miss Hatcher astounded her fans when she appeared on Desperate Housewives looking virtually unchanged from her days as Lois Lane in the Superman TV series 15 years ago.

She and fellow cast member Nicollette Sheridan have both repeatedly denied having plastic surgery.

Has Teri's face gone Bo-toxic?

Has Teri Hatcher been at the Botox again? The Desperate Housewives star appeared at last night's Dreamgirls premiere in LA looking smoother than expected for her 42 years - sparking rumours that she has had more injections of America's favourite pharmaceutical.

Her line-free forehead and awkwardly stretched looking smile seemed at odds with the natural-looking wrinkles around her eyes.

Hatcher has admitted using both Botox and collagen to smooth her skin in the past, but in March she denied having anything done to her face for more than a year, adding that she was now going to let herself age gracefully.
